BLUEMANDIBLE DESIGN

So, as usual, the site is in flux. I've thrown a basic placeholder page up here of my recent work while I work continue to update the 'core' page with some new Flash navigation. Hopefully the new site will be ready soon - to see the 'work in progress' go here.

Web Site Redesign for Avandia: Freelance for One to One Interactive

Initial look and feel of the landing page for Avandia, a drug for diabetics. Five different designs were created for the client to review, ranging from 'safe and traditional' to something a bit more adventurous.

New York Historical Society: Slavery in New York

An interactive exhibit on the history of slavery in New York City - on display in New York through March of 2006. I designed and built a Flash based interactive game, Flash based interactive tools for investigating historical documents, as well as videos for some of the displays. To the right are some of the pieces I worked on - part of the flash based Manumission interactive game (5megs), the flash based Kieft document investigation tool (1.7 megs), and a grab from the video timeline presenting the history of slavery in New York juxtaposed against the history of the American Revolution. The first two flash pieces are displayed on kiosks, and the timeline is projected onto a wall and is about 7 feet tall and 15 feet wide. Sacha Moo also worked on the Kieft document piece. Click the images on the right to launch.

Northern Forest: Rings of Time Work In Progress

This piece, currently in production, is an interactive, video based piece built in Flash and After Effects. Images acting as the navigation are projected onto a wood stump and viewers can select from several categories of video highlighting the people, history, and communities of the Northern Forest region. The flash piece is coming soon.

DIMD:

Initial work for a flash based cd-rom to educate healthcare workers on drug induced movement disorders. The project was moved to another company when part of the company I worked for was sold.
